Reinhardt was his Last Comrade—They Called at 3 A. M. on Mrs. Wenham, and the Parrot They Had Sold her Shouted,

Two rough-looking young fellows with birds to sell went into the lofty tenement at 16 Chrystie street on March 29. One was tall and raw-boned and the other short. The tall one carried a cage containing a sickly parrot and the other had a cage of canaries.

They found a customer in little Mrs. Millie Wonham, the young wife of James Wonham, night watchman at the Newsboys' Lodging House. She lives on the fourth floor in two neatly furnished rooms.

While selling the parrot to Mrs. Wonham, the two young fellows doubtless took an inventory. They noticed that Mrs. Wonham had two gold watches on the bureau, and that when all paid for the parrot she displayed about a hundred dollars. The tall young fellow, who was sick, and that he would call again and give it a try. He said he would make it with his friend and he would call on his promise. He said he would come again, but he did not.

He did call on Friday last about 3 1/2 A. M., accompanied by his shorter assistant. They came in, and the tall young fellow saw the fire escape. They did not force the window facing the fire escape, so one of them went out the window and raised the other window sill and raised the lower sash.

Sam Wenhman, who had been awakened by the parrot, which was jumping about the cage and screaming, "Papa! Papa!" heard the door open. He saw the tall young fellow. Then she heard muffled footfalls on the dining room floor. She got out of bed, turned up the lamp and saw the tall young fellow just as the tall young fellow was getting out the window. She backed away from him and screamed, and he saw the refrigerator on a knife nearly a foot long, resembling a stiletto. She saw the tall young fellow, who was the lamp stood and kneeled on the rug. She heard a crash that awakened a burglar. The burglar saw the tall young fellow and set fire to the carpet and the refrigerator.

Sam Wenhman recognized the burglar, whose face was lit up by the glare, as the seller of the parrot. He ran to the window and got down the fire escape.

Mrs. Wonham told the Eldridge street police about the case, and Patrolman Reap, who has many other calls to answer in cases of felony, took off his uniform and undertook to track the tall burglar. He saw a man on the Bowery late on Wednesday night who looked like Mrs. Wonham's visitor and arrested him. He was taken to the Essex Market Police Court yesterday morning and remanded, and later on Mr. Reap went around to the Eldridge street station to check.
